

Take your relationship therapy skills to the next level

Whether you work with couples or individuals, you probably spend a lot of clinical time talking about relationships. Helping people recognize the unconscious origins of their behaviour and choices when they have someone else to blame is a particularly fraught task.

RTI offers you training that will grow your skills, knowledge and confidence in all aspects of therapy around relationship issues. Over the last five years, participants rated our training at 4.8 out of 5 for overall value and impact for every single course we have offered, so you can be sure you will spend your time and money well. There is also a full refund should the workshop be cancelled due to the impact of COVID-19.

Next month in Christchurch, we are bringing you “Level 1 in the Developmental Model” - the two-day introduction to the most broad-reaching model of relationship therapy we know. It offers a clinical framework that integrates attachment, differentiation, and neurobiological theory into a practical and approachable methodology that clarifies the complexity of relationships for therapist and client alike.

Whether you work primarily with individuals or couples, this comprehensive perspective on how relationships operate has something for you. You also have the chance to join our growing community of Developmental Model therapists with access to free information, further training, consultation and support.

Trainers: Paula Dennan and Nic Beets are both Clinical Psychologists who each have over 25 years of experience in working with relationship issues in various models. They are the only endorsed trainers in Australasia for the Developmental Model.

Further training options and information about the trainers are available at www.relationshiptherapyinc.com
